

Chickens Roaming

The demand for chickens in the town has been rising for the past year, but until recently hens have been spotted roaming the town freely.

What might have caused this odd situation?

After investigating it was discovered that 1 out of 10 coops made by the same brand had broken locks, and the coops which previously had chickens were no where on the property.

So what caused the locks to break?

It is theorized that a strong gust of wind occurred during a thunderstorm was able to break the locks and allowed the gates to swing open, and which the chickens had the opportunity to leave after the thunderstorm had ended.

What can be done to fix this unlikely scenario?

Chickens are hard to handle and hard to catch, with the couple dozen of chickens running freely it would be impossible to catch all of them. If you do manage to catch a chicken, please find its original owner and return it.

Quote of the day: " Chickens are the rascals of nature " - Rick Lime

7/29/2020

Go Back